

Attention to Hair

I've been married long enough to know how important cosmetology is to a woman, and I applaud it.

Several years ago, someone asked the pastor of our church if he thought contemporary women were wearing too much makeup. He laughed as he replied, "I think every old barn can stand some paint."

It doesn't matter what the age of the woman may be, attention to detail in her appearance, including the hair, is a fundamental requirement.

Sarah Scoles, nursing aide certified at Life Care Center of Ritzville, is well aware of this female desire. And she is willing to do something about it.

Ann Telecky, assistant activity director, tells what happened. "Our beautician was ill, and we were having a family dinner. Several of our lady residents had planned on having their hair fixed for the dinner. When Sarah found out, she came in on her day off and fixed hair all afternoon before the dinner. The residents looked and felt beautiful."

And their hearts were filled with gratitude for someone who understood their dilemma. Care, you see, extends beyond pills and blood pressure checks and trips to the bathroom. It goes to the mind and the heart.
