

Dog Walks on Water

A man and his dog were walking along the beach when they came upon a visitor to the area, who was taking in the sights and sounds of the ocean.

The owner of the dog was proud of his pet's newly mastered feat, so he said to the tourist, "Watch this!"

At that, he tossed a piece of driftwood far out into the sea. The dog immediately ran on the surface of the water, fetched the wood, and ran back to his owner.

The visitor just shook his head in disbelief.

Whereupon, the owner repeated the procedure twice, and each time the animal went skipping across the waves, picking up the wood, and returning it to his master, while the coat of the dog's upper body remained dry.

Finally, he asked the visitor, "Did you notice anything unusual?"

The tourist responded, "Your dog can't swim, can he?"

Do you know some folks like that – people who are critical of some worthy deed or great achievement, who miss the point completely? Sometimes, such reactions come out of plain envy.

Maybe the best reaction is to shrug the shoulders, think "Oh, well" ... and move on.
