

Dog or a Lion?

A little girl developed a bad habit. She was always lying.

Once, when she was given a St. Bernard dog for her birthday, she went out and told all the neighbors that she had been given a lion.

The mother took her aside and said, "I told you not to lie. You go upstairs and tell God you are sorry. Promise God you will not lie again."

The little girl went upstairs, said her prayers, then came down again.

Her mother asked, "Did you tell God you are sorry?"

The little girl replied, "Yes, I did. And God said sometimes He finds it hard to tell my dog from a lion, too."

Perhaps you know someone like the little girl – a person who has a persistent problem with the truth.

Credibility – in any personal or business relationship – is an important part of the foundation.
