

Looking at Time

Time is a fascinating study. It means different things to different folks. Consider ...

- The astronomer evaluates it by light years.
- The geologist by vast cycles.
- The historian by epics and centuries.
- The industrialist by the fiscal year.
- The salaried person by the week or the month.
- The laborer by the weekly paycheck.
- The child by the birthday party.

For most of us, the common measure of time begins with the awkward motions of rising in the morning and the weary movements in the evening after a day's work.

While the vast majority of the hours are predetermined, planned for us, we nevertheless have precious tidbits of time that we are free to use and which ultimately determine the quality of our character and the degree of our commitment.

For many of our residents, in Life Care, Century Park and Life Care at Home, their wellbeing and satisfaction are gauged by the time and the compassion allotted to them by caring associates.

And for all of us, the Lord measures time in terms of responsible living.

– Beecher Hunter