

Pumping the Bellows

At an organ recital many years ago, the man who pumped the bellows suddenly became ill. Immediately, a famous composer who was present in the organ loft stepped forward and took his place so that the concert could go on. After the performance, a friend found out what had happened and criticized the composer for stooping to do such “commonplace” work.

“Commonplace?” replied the composer. “I love music so much that nothing I can do for it seems commonplace.”

That same spirit should motivate us in our service to our residents in Life Care, Century Park and Life Care at Home.

As members of a team, we must be willing to do whatever is required to be certain that the best of care and clean, safe and secure environments are provided for those we serve.

Instead of looking for a place of significance, let's seek a place of service.
