

The Bigness Syndrome

Our world has a fascination for bigness. Large, economy-sized boxes of detergent, super-sized meals, big-screen television sets, vehicles with extra leg room and large storage space – all are among our list of wants.

The bigger-is-better phenomenon affects the workplace, too. Associates desire the biggest office, the heftiest raise, the highest award of recognition.

We serve a big God. He is certainly capable of big feats. He parted the Red Sea for the children of Israel. He created the world in less than a week. Nothing is impossible for Him.

But it's better not to measure our business success or career satisfaction by how much money we earn. God is not interested in the size of our salaries. He is interested in our lives and the small but faithful steps we take toward Him. As you read through His Word, the Holy Bible, you will note that He chose to use the humble and the lowly, not the proud and the mighty, to accomplish His purposes and fulfill His plans.

Just be assured that a little obedience and a measure of faith make a big difference to God.

--Beecher Hunter