

THE FOUR CORNERS

The Four Corners is a region of the United States consisting of the southwestern corner of Colorado, northwestern corner of New Mexico, northeastern corner of Arizona and southeastern corner of Utah. Our company has a presence, Life Care Center of Farmington, N.M., very near where those four corners meet.

The Four Corners Monument is located at the quadripoint where the boundaries of the four states meet, and is a commonly visited feature of the region. Farmington, with a population of about 44,000, is the most populous city in the region.

The area around Four Corners is one of breathtaking beauty: graceful sand dunes, striking deserts, buttes that glow orange in the morning light, deep canyons, snow-covered mountains, fog-shrouded valleys, vertical rock, sandstone wedges jutting into the sky. It is a terrain so unusual in its character that those who explore there never weary of it.

T.H. Watkins, a writer for National Geographic, confesses his love for Four Corners. This area of 100,000 square miles, he said, “is endlessly various and fascinating in its forms. Much of this I have come to think of as my own country.

“I have spent several years exploring this western landscape, driving its roads, flying over it, hiking into its canyons, camping along its rivers, soaking it up, taking it in, sometimes writing about it, most of the time just thinking about its warps and tangles of rock and sky. This is not an idle passion. It stems from a deeply held conviction that the Four Corners country has something essential to offer us.”

Watkins’ relationship with this remarkable landscape is much like the joy that we can have in the spiritual realm as we seek to have fellowship with God. Our Lord invites us to spend this life and all eternity getting to know His inexhaustible character and nature.

– Beecher Hunter