

Wearing the Label

An English nobleman, Sir Bartel Fere, served as governor of Bombay, India, in the 1860s. He was known by both family and acquaintances as “the helpful man.”

On one occasion, when he was returning from a long trip, his wife sent a newly hired servant to meet him and to help with his luggage. “How shall I know Sir Bartel?” asked the servant. The governor’s wife responded, “Look for a tall gentleman helping somebody.”

What a remarkable, and much-to-be-desired description! Can the value and importance of a person’s life be portrayed any better way?

Fortunately, in the centers of Life Care, Century Park and in the work of Life Care at Home, there are thousands of associates who could wear that label. They may be man or woman, tall or short, but they are definitely known as helpful persons.

I am humbled and inspired to be associated with them in the mission to which we are called. As I visit in our centers, I see them “helping somebody.”
