

What's Needed

We have just come through elections in this nation, and some parties and candidates are licking their wounds while the victors in the races are preparing to take office. Through them all, in speeches and advertisements in the newspapers and on television, the population has been subjected to all sorts of cures for what ails the republic.

Everybody, it seems, has an opinion about what ought to be done, or not done.

Maybe the best advice is offered by Father James Keller, founder of The Christophers:

“What this country needs is more people to inspire others with confidence, and fewer people to discourage any initiative in the right direction; more to get into the thick of things, fewer to sit on the sidelines merely finding fault; more to point out what's right with the world, and fewer to keep harping on what's wrong with it; and more who are interested in lighting candles, and fewer who blow them out.”

Aside from government, Father Keller's analysis works well in other arenas, too, be it business, the church, education or civic endeavors.

That would also include Life Care, Century Park and Life Care at Home.

--Beecher Hunter